

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Henri Gomme

ST. GILES, OXFORD OX1 3NA

6/7

Keepsake of my kind friend Will Walker. —

W. Conway

Geoff. Ramsey

THE HISTORY OF LITTLE JACK.

Henri Pommeroy

PRINTED BY FAIN, ODEON'S-SQUARE.

THE
HISTORY OF LITTLE JACK,

BY THE AUTHOR OF SANDFORD AND MERTON,

PARIS,
SOLD BY LOUIS COLAS, BOOKSELLER, Dauphine-Street, No 32.

---

1822.

Henri Pommery

THE HISTORY OF LITTLE JACK.

---

THERE was once a poor lame old man that lived in the midst of a wide uncultivated moor, in the north of England. He had formerly been a soldier, and had almost lost the use of one leg by a wound he had received in battle, when he was fighting against the enemies of his country. This poor man, when he found himself thus disabled, built a little hut of clay, which he covered with turf dug from the common. He had a little bit of ground which he made a shift to cultivate with his own hands, and which supplied him with potatoes and vegetables.

Besides this , he sometimes gained a few halfpence by opening a gate for travellers , which stood near his house. He did not indeed get much , because few people passed that way.

What he earned was, however, enough to purchase clothes , and the few necessities he wanted.

But though poor , he was strictly honest, and never failed night and morning to address his prayers to God ; by which means he was respected by all who knew him , much more than many who were superior to him in rank and fortune.

This old man lived alone. In his walks over the common , he one day found a little kid that had lost its mother , and was almost famished with hunger; he took it home to his cottag fed it with the produce of his garden and nursed it till it grew strong and vigorous. Little Nan (for that was the name he gave it) returned his cares with gratitude, and became as much attached to him as a dog. All day she brows upon the herbage that grew around the hut, and at night reposed upon the same bed of straw with her master. Frequently did she divert him with her innocent tricks and gambols. She would nestle her little head in his bosom, and eat out of his hand part of his scant allowance of bread, which he never failed to divide with his favourite. The man often beheld her with silent joy and, in the innocent effusions of heart, would lift his hands to heaven and thank the Deity, that, even in the midst of poverty and distress, he had raised him up one faithful friend.

LITTLE JACK.

One night, in the beginning of winter, the old man thought he heard the feeble cries and lamentations of a child. As he was naturally charitable, he arose and struck a light, and, going out of his cottage, examined on every side. It was not long before he discerned an infant, which had probably been dropped by some strolling beggar or gipsy. The old man stood amazed at the sight, and knew not what to do. Shall I, said he, who find it so difficult to live at present, incumber myself with the care of an helpless infant, that will not for many years be capable of contributing to its own subsistence? And yet, added he, softening with pity, I deny assistance to an human being still more miserable than myself?—Will not that Providence which feeds the birds of the wood and the beasts of the field, and which has promised to bless all those that are kind and charitable ; assist my feeble endeavours ? At least, let me give it food and lodging for this night ; for without I receive it into my cottage, the poor abandoned wretch must perish with cold before the morning.

Saying this, he took it up in his arms, and perceived it was a fine healthy boy, though covered with rags ; the little foundling too seemed to be sensible of his kindness, and smiling in his face, stretched out his little arms, as if to embrace his benefactor.

When he had brought it into his hut, he began to be extremely embarrassed how to procure it food ; but looking at Nan, he recollected that she had just lost her kid, and saw her udder distended with milk : he, therefore, called her to him, and, presenting the child to the teat, was overjoyed to find, that it sucked as naturally as if it had really found a mother.

The goat too seemed to receive pleasure from the efforts of the child, and submitted without opposition to discharge the duties of a nurse. Contented with this experiment, the old man wrapped the child up as warmly as he could, and stretched himself out to rest, with the consciousness of having done an humane action. Early the next morning he was awakened by the cries of the child for food, which, with the assistance of his faithful Nan, he suckled as he had done the night before.

And now the old man began to feel an interest in the child, which made him defer some time longer the taking measures to be delivered from its care. Who knows, said he, but Providence, which has preserved this child in so wonderful a manner, may have destined it to something equally wonderful in his future life, and may bless me as the humble agent of his decrees?

At least, as he grows bigger, he will be a pleasure and comfort to me in this lonely cabin, and will assist in cutting turf for fuel, and cultivating the garden. From this time he became more and more attached to the little foundling; who, in a short time, learned to consider the old man as a parent, and delighted him with his innocent caresses. Gentle Nanny too, the goat, seemed to adopt him with equal tenderness as her offspring: she would stretch herself out upon the ground, while he crawled upon his hands and knees towards her: and when he had satisfied his hunger by sucking, he would nestle between her legs and go to sleep in her bosom.

It was wonderful to see how this child, thus left to nature, increased in strength and vigour. Unfettered by bandages or restraints, his limbs acquired their due proportions and form; his countenance was full and florid , and gave indications of perfect health ; and , at an age when other children are scarcely able to support themselves with the assistance of a nurse , this little foundling could run alone. It was true that he sometimes failed in his attempts , and fell to the ground ; but the ground was soft , and little Jack , for so the old man called him , was not tender or delicate ; he never minded thumps or bruises , but boldly scrambled up again and pursued his way. In a short time , little Jack was completely master of his legs ; and as the summer came on , he attended his mamma , the goat , upon the common , and used to play with her for hours together ; sometimes rolling under her belly , now climbing upon her back , and frisking about as if he had really been a kid.

As to his clothing ; Jack was not much encumbered with it : he had neither shoes , nor stockings , nor shirt , but the weather was warm , and Jack felt himself so much lighter for every kind of exercise.

In a short time after this , Jack began to imitate the sounds of his papa , the man , and his mamma , the goat ; nor was it long before he learned to speak articulately. The old man , delighted with this first dawn of reason , used to place him upon his knee , and converse with him for hours together , while his pottage was slowly boiling amid the embers of a turf fire. As he grew bigger , Jack became of considerable use to his father ; he could trust him to look after the gate , and open it during his absence ; and , as to the cookery of the family , it was not long before Jack was a complete proficient , and could make broth almost as well as his daddy himself.

During the winter nights, the old man used to entertain him with stories of what he had seen during his youth ; the battles and sieges he had been witness to , and the hardships he had undergone ; all this he related with so much vivacity , that Jack was never tired of listening.

But what delighted him beyond measure was to see daddy shoulder his crutch, instead of a musket , and give the word of command. To the right—to the left—present—fire—march—halt—all this was familiar to Jack's ear as soon as he could speak , and before he was six years old , he poized and presented a broomstick , which his daddy gave him for that purpose , with as good a grace as any soldier of his age in Europe.

The old man too instructed him in such plain and simple morals and religion , as he was able to explain.

« Never tell an untruth, Jack, » said he, « even though you were to be flayed alive, a soldier never lies. » Jack held up his head, marched across the floor, and promised his daddy that he would always tell the truth like a soldier. But the old man, as he was something of a scholar, had a great ambition that his darling should learn to read, and write; and this was a work of some difficulty; for he had neither printed book, nor pens, nor paper in his cabin. Industry, however, enables us to overcome difficulties; in the summer time, as the old man sat before his cottage, he would draw letters in the sand, and teach Jack to name them singly, until he was acquainted with the whole alphabet; he then proceeded to syllables, and after that to words; all which his little pupil learned to pronounce with great facility: and, as he had a strong propensity to imitate what he saw, he not only acquired the power of reading words , but of tracing all the letters which composed them on the sand.

About this time , the poor goat , which had nursed Jack so faithfully , grew ill and died. He tended her with the greatest affection and assiduity during her illness, brought her the freshest herbs for food, and would frequently support her head for hours together upon his little bosom. But it was all in vain ; he lost his poor mammy , as he used to call her , and was for some time inconsolable ; for Jack , though his knowledge was bounded, had an uncommon degree of gratitude and affection in his temper. He was not able to talk as finely about love, tenderness, and sensibility, as many other little boys , that have enjoyed greater advantages of education , but he felt the reality of them in his heart, and thought it so natural to love every thing that loves us, that he never even suspected it was possible to do otherwise. The poor goat was buried in the old man's garden, and thither little Jack would often come, and call upon his poor mammy Nan, and ask her why she had left him?

One day, as he was thus employed, a lady happened to come by in a carriage, and overheard him before he was aware. Jack ran in an instant to open the gate; but the lady stopped, and asked him whom he was bemoaning so pitifully, and calling upon. Jack answered, that it was his poor mammy, that was buried in the garden. The lady thought it very odd to hear of such a burial place, and therefore proceeded to question him, « How did your mamma get her living? » said she. « She used to graze here upon the common all day long, » said Jack.

The lady was still more astonished ; but the old man came out of his hut and explained the whole affair to her , which surprised her very much ; for though this lady had seen a great deal of the world , and had read a variety of books , it had never once entered into her head that a child might grow strong and vigorous by sucking a goat , instead of eating pap. She therefore looked at Jack with amazement , admired his brown but animated face , and praised his shape and activity.

« Will you go with me , little boy ? » said she , « and I will take care of you , if you behave well. » « No , » said Jack , « I must stay with daddy ; he has taken care of me for many years , and now I must take care of him ; otherwise I should like very well to go with such a sweet , good-natured lady. »

The lady was not displeased with Jack's answer, and putting her hand in her pocket, gave him half a crown, to buy him shoes and stockings, and pursued her journey.

Jack was not unacquainted with the use of money, as he had been often sent to the next village to purchase bread and necessaries; but he was totally unacquainted with the use of shoes and stockings, which he had never worn in his life, or felt the want of. The next day, however, the old man bade him run to town, and lay his money out as the lady had desired; for he had too much honour to think of disobeying her commands, or suffering it to be expended for any other purpose. It was not long before Jack returned; but the old man was much surprised to see him come back as bare as he went out. « Heigh, Jack! » said he, « where are the shoes and stockings which you were to purchase ? » « Daddy , » answered Jack , « I went to the shop , and just tried a pair for sport , but I found them so combersome , that I could not walk , and I would not wear such things even if the lady would give me another half-crown for doing it ; so I laid the money out in a warm jacket for you , because the winter is coming on , and you seem to be more afraid of the cold than formerly . »

Many such instances of conduct did Jack display ; from which it was easy to perceive , that he had an excellent soul and generous temper . One failing , indeed , Jack was liable to ; though a very good-natured boy , he was a little too jealous of his honour . His daddy had taught him the use of his hands and legs , and Jack had such dispositions for the art of boxing , that he could beat every boy in the neighbourhood , of his age and size . Even if they were a head taller , it made no difference to Jack , provided they said any thing to wound his honour ; for otherwise he was the most mild , pacific creature in the world. One day that he had been sent to the village , he returned with his eyes black , and his face swelled to a frightful size : it was even with difficulty that he was able to walk at all , so sore was he with the pommelling he had received. « What have you been doing now , Jack ? » said the old man. « Only fighting with Dick the butcher. » « You rogue , » said the old man , « he is twice as big as you are , and the best fighter in all the country. » « What does that signify ? » said Jack , « he called you an old beggarman , and then I struck him ; and I will strike him again whenever he calls you so , even if he should beat me to pieces ; for you know , daddy , that you are not a beggarman , but a soldier. »

In this manner lived little Jack, until he was twelve years old; at this time his poor old daddy fell sick, and became incapable of moving about. Jack did every thing he could think of for the poor man; he made him broths, he fed him with his own hands, he watched whole nights by his bed-side, supporting his head and helping him when he wanted to move. But it was all in vain; his poor daddy grew daily worse, and perceived it to be impossible that he should recover. He one day therefore called little Jack to his bed-side, and pressing his hand affectionately, told him he was just going to die. Little Jack burst into a flood of tears at this information, but his daddy desired him to compose himself, and attend to the last advice he should be able to give him.

« I have lived, » said the old man, « a great many years in poverty, but I do not know that I have been worse off than if I had been rich, I have avoided, perhaps, many faults, and many uneasinesses, which I should have incurred had I been in another situation; and though I have often wanted a meal and always fared hard, I have enjoyed as much health and life as usually falls to the lot of my betters. I am now going to die; I feel it in every part; the breath will soon be out of my body; then I shall be put in the ground, and the worms will eat your poor old daddy. »

At this Jack renewed his tears and sobbings, for he was unable to restrain them.

But the old man said; « Have patience, my child; though I should leave this world, as I have always been strictly honest and endeavoured to do my duty, I do not doubt but God will pity me, and convey me to a better place, where I shall be happier than I have ever been here.

« This is what I have always taught you , and this belief gives me the greatest comfort in my last moments. The only regret I feel , is for you , my dearest child , whom I leave unprovided for. But you are strong and vigorous , and almost able to get your living. As soon as I am dead , you must go to the next village , and inform the people that they may come and bury me. You must then endeavour to get into service , and work for your living ; and , if you are strictly honest and sober , I do not doubt that you will find a livelihood , and that God , who is the common father of all , will protect and bless you. Adieu , my child , I grow fainter and fainter ; never forget your poor old daddy , nor the example he has set you ; but in every situation of life discharge your duty , and live like a soldier , and a Christian. »

When the old man had with difficulty uttered these last instructions, his voice entirely failed him, his limbs grew cold and stiff, and in a few minutes he expired without a groan. Little Jack, who hung crying over his daddy, called upon him in vain, in vain endeavoured to revive him. At length he pulled off his clothes, went into his daddy's bed, and endeavoured for many hours to animate him with the warmth of his own body; but finding all his endeavours fruitless, he concluded that he was indeed dead; and therefore, weeping bitterly, he dressed himself, and went to the village as he had been ordered.

The poor little boy was thus left entirely destitute, and knew not what to do; but one of the farmers, who had been acquainted with him before, offered to take him into his house, and give him his victuals for a few months, till he could find a service.

Jack thankfully accepted the offer, and served him faithfully for several months; during which time he learned to milk, to drive the plough, and never refused any kind of work he was able to perform.

But, by ill luck, this good-natured farmer contracted a fever, by overheating himself in the harvest, and died in the beginning of winter. His wife was therefore obliged to discharge her servants, and Jack was again turned loose upon the world, with only his clothes, and a shilling in his pocket, which his kind mistress had made him a present of.

He was very sorry for the loss of his master; but he was now grown bigger and stronger, and thought he should easily find employment. He therefore set out upon his travels, walking all day, and inquiring at every farm-house for work. But in this attempt he was unfortunate, for nobody chose to employ a stranger : and though he lived with the greatest economy, he soon found himself in a worse situation than ever, without a farthing in his pocket, or a morsel of bread to eat. Jack, however, was not of a temper to be easily cast down; he walked resolutely on all day, but towards evening was overtaken by a violent storm of rain, which wetted him to the skin before he could find a bush for shelter. Now poor Jack began to think of his old daddy, and the comforts he had formerly enjoyed upon the common, where he had always a roof to shelter him, and a slice of bread for supper. But tears and lamentations were vain; and therefore, as soon as the storm was over, he persued his journey, in hopes of finding some barn or out-house to creep into for the rest of the night.

While he was thus wandering about, he saw at some distance a great light, which seemed to come from some prodigious fire. Jack did not know what this could be; but in his present situation, he thought a fire no disagreeable object, and therefore determined to approach it. When he came nearer, he saw a large building which seemed to spout fire and smoke at several openings, and heard an incessant noise of blows, and the rattling of chains. Jack was at first a little frightened, but summoning all his courage, he crept cautiously on to the building, and looking through a chink discovered several men and boys employed in blowing fires and hammering burning masses of iron. This was a very comfortable sight to him in his present forlorn condition; so finding a door half open, he ventured in, and placed himself as near as he dared to one of the flaming furnaces.

It was not long before he was discovered by one of the workmen, who asked him, roughly, what business he had there? Jack answered, with great humility, that he was a poor boy, looking out for work; that he had had no food all day, and was wet to the skin with the rain, which was evident enough from the appearance of his clothes. By great good luck the man he spoke to was good-natured, and therefore not only permitted him to stay by the fire, but gave him some broken victuals for his supper. After this, he laid himself down in a corner, and slept without disturbance till morning.

He was scarcely awake the next day, when the master of the forge came in to overlook his men, who finding Jack, and hearing his story, began to reproach him as a lazy vagabond, and asked him why he did not work for his living. Jack assured him there was nothing he so earnestly desired, and that if he would please to employ him, there was nothing he would not do to earn a subsistence.

« Well, my boy, » said the master, « if this be true, you shall soon be tried; nobody need be idle here; » so calling his foreman, he ordered him to set that lad to work, and pay him in proportion to his deserts. Jack now thought himself completely happy, and worked with so much assiduity, that he soon gained a comfortable livelihood, and acquired the esteem of his master. But unfortunately, he was a little too unreserved in his conversation, and communicated the story of his former life and education.

This was great matter of diversion to all the other boys of the forge; who, whenever they were inclined to be merry, would call him little Jack the beggar-boy, and imitate the baaing of a goat. This was too much for his irascible temper, and he never failed to resent it;

by which means he was engaged in continual quarrels and combats, to the great disturbance of the house; so that his master, though in other respects perfectly satisfied with his behaviour, began to fear that he should at last be obliged to discharge him.

It happened one day, that a large company of gentlemen and ladies were introduced to see the works. The master attended them, and explained, with great politeness, every part of his manufacture. They viewed with astonishment the different methods by which that useful and necessary ore, iron, is rendered fit for human use. They examined the furnaces where it is melted down to disengage it from the dross, with which it is mixed in the bowels of the earth, and whence it runs down in liquid torrents like fire. They beheld with equal pleasure the prodigious hammers, which, moved by the force of water, mould it into massy bars, for the service of man. While they were busy in examining these different processes, they were alarmed by a sudden noise of discord, which broke out on the other side of the building; and the master inquiring into the cause, was told that it was only little Jack, who was fighting with Tom the collier. At this, the master cried out, in a passion, « there is no peace to be expected in the furnace, while that little rascal is employed; send him to me, and I will instantly discharge him. » At this moment Jack appeared, all covered with blood and dirt, and stood before his angry judge in a modest, but resolute posture. « Is this the reward, » said his master, « you little audacious vagabond, for all my kindness? Can you never refrain a single instant from broils and fighting? But I am determined to bear it no longer; and therefore you shall never, from this hour, do a single stroke of work for me. » « Sir, » replied Jack, with great humility, but yet with firmness, « I am extremely sorry to have disoblighd you, nor have I ever done it willingly since I have been here ; and if the other boys would only mind their business as well as I do , and not molest me , you would not have been offended now ; for I defy them all to say , that , since I have been in the house , I have ever given any one the least provocation, or ever refused , to the utmost of my strength , to do whatever I have been ordered. » « That's true , in good faith , » said the foreman ; « I must do little Jack the justice to say , that there is not a more honest , sober , and industrious lad about the place. Set him to what you will , he never sculks , never grumbles , never slights his work ; and if it were not for a little passion and fighting , I don't believe there would be his fellow in England. » « Well, said the master, a little mollified, « but what is the cause of all this sudden disturbance ? » « Sir, » answered Jack, « it is Tom that has been abusing me, and telling me that my father was a beggarman and my mother a nanny-goat ; and when I desired him to be quiet, he went baaing all about the house ; and this I could not bear : for as to my poor father, he was an honest soldier ; and if I did suck a goat, she was the best creature in the world, and I wont hear her abused while I have any strength in my body. » At this harangue, the whole audience were scarcely able to refrain from laughing ; and the master, with more composure, told Jack to mind his business, and threatened the other boys with punishment if they disturbed him.

But a lady who was in company seemed particularly interested about little Jack, and when she had heard his story, said, « this must certainly be the little boy who opened a gate several years past for me upon Norcot Moor. I remember being struck with his appearance, and hearing him. I was very much affected with his history, and since he deserves so good a character, if you will part with him, I will instantly take him into my service. »

The master replied, that he should part with him with great satisfaction to such an excellent mistress; that, indeed, the boy deserved all the commendations which had been given; but since the other lads had such an habit of plaguing, and Jack was of so impatient a temper, he despaired of ever composing their animosities.

Jack was then called, and informed of the lady's offer, which he instantly accepted with the greatest readiness, and received immediate directions to her house.

Jack was now in a new sphere of life. His face was washed, his hair combed, he was clothed afresh, and appeared a very smart active lad.

His business was to help in the stable, to water the horses, to clean shoes, to perform errands, and to do all the jobs of the family; and in the discharge of these services, he soon gave universal satisfaction.

He was indefatigable in doing what he was ordered, never grumbled, or appeared out of temper, and seemed so quiet and inoffensive in his manners, that every body wondered how he had acquired the character of being quarrelsome. In a short time, he became both the favourite and the drudge of the whole family; for, speak but kindly to him, and call him a little soldier, and Jack was at every one's disposal.

This was Jack's particular foible and vanity; at his leisure hours, he would divert himself by the hour together in poizing a dungfork, charging with a broomstick, and standing centry at the stable-door. Another propensity of Jack's, which now discovered itself, was an immoderate love of horses. The instant he was introduced into the stable, he attached himself so strongly to these animals, that you would have taken him for one of the same species, or at least a near relation. Jack was never tired with rubbing down and currying them; the coachman had scarcely any business but to sit upon his box; all the operations of the stable were intrusted to little Jack, nor was it ever known that he neglected a single particular. But what gave him more pleasure than all the rest, was sometimes to accompany his mistress upon a little horse, which he managed with infinite dexterity.

Jack too discovered a great disposition for all the useful and mechanic arts. He had served an apprenticeship already to the manufactory of iron, and of this he was almost as vain as being a soldier. As he began to extend his knowledge of the world, he saw that nothing could be done without iron. « How would you plough the ground, » said Jack ; « how would you dig your garden ; how would you even light a fire , dress a dinner , shoe a horse , or do the least thing in the world , if we workmen at the forge did not take the trouble of preparing it for you ? » Thus Jack would sometimes expatiate upon the dignity and importance of his own profession , to the great admiration of all the other servants. These ideas naturally gave Jack a great esteem for the profession of a blacksmith ; and , in his occasional visits to the forge with the horses , he learnt to make and fix a shoe as neatly as any artist in the country.

Nor were Jack's talents confined to the manufactory of iron; his love of horses was so great, and his interest in every thing that related to them, that it was not long before he acquired a very competent knowledge in the art of sadlery.

Jack would also sometimes observe the carpenters when they were at work, and sometimes by stealth attempt the management of their tools, in which he succeeded as well as in every thing else, so that he was looked upon by every body as a very active, ingenious boy.

There was in the family where he now lived a young gentleman, the nephew of his mistress, who had lost his parents, and was therefore brought up by his aunt. As Master Willets was something younger than Jack, and a very good-natured boy, he soon began to take notice of him, and he much diverted with his company.

Jack, indeed, was not undeserving this attention; for although he could not boast any great advantages of education, his conduct was entirely free from all the vices to which some of the lower classes of people are subject. Jack was never heard to swear, or express himself with any indecency. He was civil and respectful in his manners to all his superiors, and uniformly good-natured to his equals. In respect to the animals entrusted to his care, he not only refrained from using them ill, but was never tired with doing them good offices. Added to this, he was sober, temperate, hardy, active, and ingenious, and despised a lie as much as any of his betters. Master Willets now began to be much pleased with playing at cricket and trap-ball with Jack, who excelled at both these games. Master Willets had a little horse, which Jack looked after, and not contented with looking after him in the best manner, he used to ride him at his leisure hours with so much care and address, that in a short time he made him the most gentle and docile little animal in the country. Jack had acquired this knowledge partly from his own experience, and partly from paying particular attention to an itinerant riding-master, that had lately exhibited various feats in that neighbourhood. Jack attended him so closely, and made so good a use of his time, that he learned to imitate almost every thing he saw, and used to divert the servants and his young master with acting the tailors's riding to Brentford.

The young gentleman had a master who used to come three times a week to teach him accounts, and writing, and geography. Jack used to be sometimes in the room while the lessons were given, and listened, according to custom, with so much attention to all that passed, that he received very considerable advantage for his own improvement.

He had now a little money, and he laid some of it out to purchase pens and paper, and a slate, with which at night he used to imitate every thing he had heard and seen in the day; and his little master, who began to love him very sincerely, when he saw him so desirous of improvement, contrived, under one pretence or another, to have him generally in the room while he was receiving instruction himself.

In this manner Jack went on for some years, leading a life very agreeable to himself, and discharging his duty very much to the satisfaction of his mistress. An unlucky accident at length happened to interrupt his tranquillity. A young gentleman came down to visit Master Willets, who, having been educated in France, and among genteel people in London, had a very great taste for finery, and a supreme contempt for all the vulgar.

His dress too was a little particular , as well as his manners ; for he spent half his time in adjusting his head , wore a large black bag tied to his hair behind , and would sometimes strut about for half an hour together with his hat under his arm , and a little sword by his side . This young man had a supreme contempt for all the vulgar , which he did not attempt to conceal ; and when he had heard the story of Jack's birth and education , he could scarcely bear to be in the same room with him .

Jack soon perceived the aversion which the stranger entertained for him , and at first endeavoured to remove it , by every civility in his power ; but when he found that he gained nothing by all his humility , his temper , naturally haughty , took fire , and , as far as he dared , he plainly showed all the resentment he felt .

It happened one day, after Jack had received some very mortifying usage from this young gentleman, that as he was walking along the road, he met with a showman, who was returning from a neighbouring fair with some wild beasts in a cart. Among the rest was a middle-sized monkey, who was not under cover like the rest, and played so many antic tricks, and made so many grimaces, as engaged all Jack's attention; and delighted him very much; for he always had a propensity for every species of drollery. After a variety of questions and conversation, the showman, who probably wanted to be rid of his monkey, proposed to Jack to purchase him for half a crown. Jack could not resist the temptation of being master of such a droll diverting animal, and therefore agreed to the bargain. But when he was left alone with his purchase, whom he led along by a chain, he soon began to repent his haste, and knew not how to dispose of him. As there was, however, no remedy, Jack brought him carefully home, and confined him safe in an out-house, which was not applied to any use. In this situation he kept him several days, without accident, and frequently visited him at his leisure hours, with apples, nuts, and such other presents as he could procure. Among the other tricks which the monkey had been taught to perform, he would rise upon his hind legs at the word of command, and bow with the greatest politeness to the company. Jack, who had found out these accomplishments in his friend, could not resist the impulse of making them subservient to his resentment.

He, therefore, one day, procured some flour, with which he powdered his monkey's head, fixed a large paper bag to his neck, put an old hat under his arm, and tied a large iron skewer to his side, instead of a sword ; and, thus accoutered, led him about with infinite satisfaction, calling him Monsieur, and jabbering such broken French as he had picked up from the conversation of the visitor. It happened very unluckily, at this very instant, that the young gentleman himself passed by, and instantly saw at one glance the intended copy of himself, and all the malice of little Jack ; who was leading him along, and calling to him to hold up his head, and look like a person of fashion. Rage instantly took possession of his mind, and drawing his sword, which he happened to have on, he ran the poor monkey through with a sudden thrust, and laid him dead upon the ground. What more he might have done is uncertain, for Jack, who was not of a temper to see calmly such an outrage committed upon an animal whom he considered as his friend, flew upon him like a fury, and wresting the sword out of his hand, broke it into twenty pieces. The young gentleman himself received a fall in the scuffle, which, though it did him no material damage, daubed all his clothes, and totally spoiled the whole arrangement of his dress. At this instant, the lady herself, who had heard the noise, came down, and the violence of poor Jack was too apparent to be excused. Jack, indeed, was very sorry to have offended; but, when he was ordered to make concessions to the young gentleman, as the only conditions upon which he could be kept in the family, he absolutely refused. He owned, indeed, that he was much to blame for resenting the provocations he had received, and endeavouring to make his mistress's company ridiculous; but as to what he had done in defence of his friend the monkey, there was no possible arguments which could convince him he was in the least to blame; nor would he have made submissions to the king himself. — This unfortunate obstinacy of Jack's was the occasion of his being discharged, very much to the regret of the lady herself, and still more to that of Master Willets. Jack therefore packed up his clothes in a little bundle, shook all his fellow-servants by the hand, took an affectionate leave of his kind master, and once more sallied out upon his travels.

He had not walked far before he came to a town, where a party of soldiers were beating up for volunteers. Jack mingled with the crowd that surrounded the recruiting serjeant, and listened with great pleasure to the sound of the fifes and drums; nor could he help mechanically holding up his head, and stepping forward with an air that shewed the trade was not entirely new to him.

The serjeant soon took notice of these gestures, and seeing him, clapped him upon the back, and asked him if he would enlist. — « You are a brave boy, » said he, « I can see it in your looks — come along with us, and I don't doubt, in a few weeks, you'll be as complete a soldier as those who have been in the army for years. »

Jack made no answer to this, but by instantly poisoning his stick, cocking his hat fiercely, and going through the whole manual exercise. — « Prodigious, indeed ! » cried the serjeant. « I see you have been in the army already, and can eat fire as well as any of us. But come with us, my brave lad, you shall live well, have little to do, but now and then fight for your country and king, as every gentleman ought; and in a short time I don't doubt but I shall see you a captain, or some great man, rolling in wealth, which you have got out of the spoils of your enemies. » « No, » said Jack, « captain, that will never do—no tricks upon travellers—I know better what I have to expect if I enlist—I must lie hard, live hard, expose my life and limbs every hour of the day, and be soundly cudgelled every now and then into the bargain. » « O'ons, » cried the serjeant, « where did the young dog pick up all this? He is enough to make a whole company desert. » « No, » said Jack, « they shall never desert through me; for though I know this, as I am at present out of employment, and have a great respect for the character of a gentleman soldier, I will enlist directly in your regiment. » « A brave fellow, indeed, » said the serjeant; « here, my boy, here is your money and your cockade; » both which he directly presented, for fear his recruit should change his mind; and thus in a moment little Jack became a soldier.

He had scarcely time to feel himself easy in his new accoutrements, before he was embarked for India in the character of a marine. This kind of life was entirely new to Jack; however, his usual activity and spirit of observation did not desert him here; and he had not been embarked many weeks, before he was perfectly acquainted with all the duties of a sailor, and in that respect equal to most on board. It happened that the ship, in which he sailed, touched at the Cormo Islands, in order to take in wood and water; these are some little islands near the coast of Africa, inhabited by blacks. Jack often went on shore with the officers, attending them on their shooting parties to carry their powder and shot, and the game they killed.

All this country consists of very lofty hills, covered with trees and shrubs of various kinds, which never lose their leaves, from the perpetual warmth of the climate. Through these it is frequently difficult to force a way, and the hills themselves abound in precipices. It happened that one of the officers whom Jack was attending upon a shooting party, took aim at some great bird and brought it down; but as it fell into some deep valley, over some rocks which it was impossible to descend, they despaired of gaining their prey. Jack immediately, with officious haste, set off and ran down the more level side of the hill, thinking to make a circuit and reach the valley into which the bird had fallen. He set off, therefore, but as he was totally ignorant of the country, he, in a short time, buried himself so deep in the wood, which grew continually thicker, that he knew not which way to proceed.

He then thought it most prudent to return ; but this he found as difficult to effect as the other. He therefore wandered about the woods with inconceivable difficulty all day, but could never find his company nor even reach shore, or obtain the prospect of the sea.

At length the night approached , and Jack , who perceived it to be impossible to do that in the dark , which he had not been able to effect in the light , lay down under a rock , and composed himself to rest as well as he was able.

The next day he rose with the light, and once more attempted to regain the shore : but unfortunately he had totally lost all idea of the direction he ought to pursue, and saw nothing around him but the dismal prospect of woods and hills and precipices , without a guide or path. Jack now began to be very hungry, but as he had a fowling-piece with him, and powder and shot, he soon procured himself a dinner; and kindling a fire with some dry leaves and sticks, he roasted his game upon the embers, and dined as comfortably as he could be expected to do in so forlorn a situation. Finding himself much refreshed, he pursued his journey, but with as little success as ever. On the third day, he indeed came in sight of the sea, but found that he was quite on a different side of the island from that where he left the ship, and that neither ship nor boat was to be seen. Jack now lost all hopes of rejoining his comrades, for he knew the ship was to sail, at farthest, upon the third day, and would not wait for him.

He therefore sat down very pensively upon a rock, and cast his eyes upon the vast extent of ocean which was stretched out before him.

He found himself now abandoned upon a strange country, without a single friend, acquaintance, or even any one who spoke the same language. He at first thought of seeking out the natives, and making known to them his deplorable state; but he began to fear the reception he might meet with among them. They might not be pleased, he thought, with his company, and might take the liberty of treating him as the white men generally treat the blacks when they get them into their possession; that is, make him work hard with very little victuals, and knock him on the head if he attempted to run away. And, therefore, says Jack, as he was meditating all alone, it may, perhaps, be better for me to stay quiet where I am. It is true, indeed, I shall not have much company to talk to, but then I shall have nobody to quarrel with me, or baa, or laugh at my poor daddy and mammy. Neither do I at present see how

I shall get a livelihood, when my powder and shot are all expended; but, however, I shall hardly be starved, for I saw several kinds of fruits in the woods, and some roots which look very much like carrots. As to clothes, when mine wear out, I shall not much want new ones; for the weather is charmingly warm; and, therefore, all things considered, I don't see why I should not be as happy here as in any other place.

When Jack had finished his speech, he set himself to find a lodging for the night.

He had not examined far before he found a dry cavern in a rock, which he thought would prove a very comfortable residence; he therefore went to work with an hatchet he had with him, and cut some boughs of trees, which he spread upon the floor, and over those a long silky kind of grass, which he found in plenty near the place, to make himself a bed. His next care was, how to secure himself in case of any attack, for he did not know whether the island contained any wild beasts or not. He therefore cut down several branches of trees, and wove them into a kind of wicker work, as he had seen the men do hurdles when he lived with the farmer; with this contrivance he found he could very securely barricade the entrance of his cave. And now, as the evening was again approaching he began to feel himself hungry, and seeking along the sea-shore, he found some shell fish, which supplied him with a plentiful meal.

The next day Jack arose, a little melancholy indeed, but with a resolution to struggle manfully with the difficulties of his situation. He walked into the woods and saw several kinds of fruit and berries, some of which he ventured to eat, as the birds had pecked them, and found the taste agreeable. He also dug up several species of roots, but feared to taste them lest they should be poisonous. At length, he selected one that very much resembled a potatoe, and determined to roast it in the embers, and taste a very small bit. It can hardly, thought Jack, do me much hurt, in so very small a quantity; and if that agrees with me I will increase the dose. The root was fortunately extremely wholesome and nutritive, so that Jack was in a very short time tolerably secure against the danger of wanting food. In this manner did Jack lead a kind of savage, but tolerably contented, life for several months; during which time he enjoyed perfect health, and was never discovered by any of the natives. He used several times a-day to visit the shore, in hopes that some ship might pass that way and deliver him from his solitary imprisonment.

This, at length, happened, by the boat of an English ship, that was sailing to India, happening to touch upon the coast; Jack instantly hailed the crew, and the officer, upon hearing the story, agreed to receive him; the captain too, when he found that Jack was by no means a contemptible sailor, very willingly gave him his passage, and promised him a gratuity besides, if he behaved well.

Jack arrived in India without any accident, and, relating his story, was permitted to serve in another regiment, as his own was no longer there. He soon distinguished himself by his courage and good behaviour on several occasions, and before long was advanced to the rank of a serjeant. In this capacity, he was ordered out upon an expedition into the remote parts of the country. The little army in which he served now marched on for several weeks through a burning climate, and in want of all the necessities of life. At length they entered upon some extensive plains, which bordered upon the celebrated country of the Tartars. Jack was perfectly well acquainted with the history of this people, and their method of fighting. He knew them to be some of the best horsemen in the world; indefatigable in their attacks, though often repulsed returning to the charge, and not to be invaded with impunity; he, therefore, took the liberty of observing to some of the officers, that nothing could be more dangerous than their rashly engaging themselves in those extensive plains, where they were every moment exposed to the attacks of cavalry, without any successful method of defence, or place of retreat, in case of any misfortune. These remonstrances were not much attended to, and after a few hours farther march, they were alarmed by the approach of a considerable body of Tartar horsemen. They, however, drew up with all the order they were able, and firing several successive vollies, endeavoured to keep the enemy at a distance. But the Tartars had no design of doing that with a considerable loss, which they were sure of doing with ease and safety. Instead, therefore, of charging the Europeans, they contented themselves with giving continual alarms, and menacing them on every side, without exposing themselves to any considerable danger.

The army now attempted to retreat, hoping that they should be able to arrive at the neighbouring mountains, where they would be safe from the incursions of the horse. But in this attempt they were equally disappointed; for another considerable body of enemies appeared on that side, and blocked their passage. The Europeans now found they were surrounded on all sides, and that resistance was vain. The commanding officer, therefore, judged it expedient to try what could be effected by negotiation, and sent one of his officers, who understood something of the enemies. The Tartar chief received the Europeans with great civility, and after having gently reproached them with their ambition, in coming so far to invade a people who had never injured them, he consented upon very moderate conditions to their enlargement: but he insisted upon having their arms delivered up, except a very few which he permitted them to keep for defence in their return, and upon retaining a certain number of Europeans as hostages for the performance of the stipulated articles. Among those who were thus left with the Tartars Jack happened to be included, and while all the rest seemed inconsolable at being thus made prisoners by a barbarous nation , he alone , accustomed to all the vicissitudes of life , retained his cheerfulness , and prepared to meet every reverse of fortune with his usual firmness.

The Tartars , among whom Jack was now to reside , constitute several different tribes or nations , which inhabit an immense extent of country both in Europe and Asia. Their country is in general open and uncultivated , without cities or towns , such as we see in England. The inhabitants themselves are a bold and hardy race of men that live in small tents , and change their place of abode with the different seasons of the year. All their property consists in herds of cattle , which they drive along with them from place to place ; and upon whose milk and flesh they subsist. They are particularly fond of horses , of which they have a small but excellent breed , hardy and indefatigable for the purposes of war, and they excel in the management of them beyond what is easy to conceive. Immense herds of these animals wander loose about the deserts, but marked with the particular mark of the person or tribe to which they belong. When they want any of these animals for use, a certain number of their young men jump upon their horses with nothing but an halter to guide them, each carrying in his hand a pole with a noose of cord at the end. When they come in sight of the herd, they pursue the horse they wish to take at full speed, come up with him in spite of his swiftness, and never fail to throw the noose about his neck as he runs. They are frequently known to jump upon young horses, that have passed their whole life in the desert, and with only a girth around the animal's body to hold by, maintain their seat, in spite of all his violent exertions; until they have wearied him out and reduced him into perfect obedience. Such was the nation with whom the lot of Jack was now to reside, nor was he long before he had an opportunity of showing his talents.

It happened that a favourite horse of the chief was taken with a violent fever, and seemed to be in immediate danger of death. The Khan, for so he is called among the Tartars, seeing his horse grow hourly worse, at length applied to the Europeans, to know if they could suggest any thing for his recovery. All the officers were profoundly ignorant of farriery; but when the application was made to Jack, he desired to see the horse; and with great gravity began to feel his pulse, by passing his hand within the animal's fore-leg; which gave the Tartars a very high idea of his ingenuity. Finding that the animal was in a high fever, he proposed to the Khan to let him blood, which he had learned to do very dexterously in England. He obtained permission to do as he pleased; and having, by great good luck, a lancet with him, he let him blood very dexterously in the neck. After this operation he covered him up, and gave him a warm potion made out of such ingredients as he could procure upon the spot, and left him quiet. In a few hours the horse began to mend, and, to the great joy of the Khan, perfectly recovered in a few days. This cure so opportunely performed, raised the reputation of Jack so high, that every body came to consult him about their horses, and in a short time he was the universal farrier of the tribe. The Khan himself conceived so great an affection for him, that he gave him an excellent horse to ride upon and attend in his hunting parties; and Jack, who excelled in the art of horsemanship, managed him so well as to gain the esteem of the whole nation.

The Tartars, though they are excellent horsemen, have no idea of managing their horses, unless by violence; but Jack in a short time, by continual care and attention, made his horse so docile and obedient to every motion of his hand and leg, that the Tartars themselves would gaze upon him with admiration, and allow themselves to be outdone. Not contented with this, he procured some iron, and made his horseshoes in the European taste; this also was matter of astonishment to all the Tartars, who are accustomed to ride their horses unshod. He next observed that the Tartar saddles are all prodigiously large and cumbersome, raising the horseman up to a great distance from the back of his horse.

Jack set himself to work, and was not long before he had completed something like an English hunting saddle, on which he paraded before the Khan. All mankind seem to have a passion for novelty, and the Khan was so delighted with this effort of Jack's ingenuity, that, after paying him the highest compliments, he intimated a desire of having such a saddle for himself. Jack was the most obliging creature in the world, and spared no labour to serve his friends; he went to work again, and in a short time completed a saddle still more elegant for the Khan. These exertions gained him the favour and esteem both of the Khan and all the tribe; so that Jack was an universal favourite, and loaded with presents, while all the rest of the officers, who had never learned to make a saddle or an horse-shoe, were treated with contempt and indifference.

Jack, indeed, behaved with the greatest generosity to his countrymen, and divided with them all the mutton and venison which were given him; but he could not help sometimes observing, that it was great pity they had not learned to make an horseshoe instead of dancing and dressing hair.

And now an ambassador arrived from the English settlements, with an account that all the conditions of the treaty had been performed, and demanding the restitution of the prisoners. The Tartar chief was too much a man of honour to delay an instant, and they were all restored; but before they set out, Jack laboured with indefatigable zeal to finish a couple of saddles and a dozen horseshoes, which he presented to the Khan with many expressions of gratitude. The Khan was charmed with this proof of his affection, and in return made him a present of a couple of fine horses, and several valuable skins of beasts. Jack arrived without any accident at the English settlements ; and selling his skins and horses , found himself in possession of a moderate sum of money. He now began to have a desire to return to England , and one of the officers , who had often been obliged to him during his captivity, procured him a discharge. He embarked, therefore, with all his property on board a ship, which was returning home, and in a few months was safely landed at Plymouth.

But Jack was too active and too prudent to give himself up to idleness. After considering various schemes of business, he determined to take up his old trade of forging ; and for that purpose made a journey into the North, and found his old master alive , and as active as ever. His master, who had always entertained an esteem for Jack , welcomed him with great affection, and being in want of a foreman, he engaged him at a very handsome price for that place. Jack was now indefatigable in the execution of his new office; inflexibly honest where the interests of his master were concerned, and at the same time humane and obliging to the men who were under him, he gained the affection of all about him. In a few years his master was so thoroughly convinced of his merit, that growing old himself, he took Jack into partnership, and committed the management of the whole business to his care. He continued to exert the same qualities now which he had done before, by which means he improved the business so much, as to gain a considerable fortune, and become one of the most respectable manufacturers in the country. — But, with all this prosperity, he never discovered the least pride or haughtiness; on the contrary; he employed part of his fortune to purchase the moor where he formerly lived, and built himself a small, but convenient house, upon the very spot where his daddy's hut had formerly stood. Hither he would sometimes retire from business, and cultivate his garden with his own hands, for he hated idleness.

To all his poor neighbours he was kind and liberal, relieving them in their distress; and often entertaining them at his house, where he used to dine with them with the greatest affability, and frequently relate his own story, in order to prove that it is of very little consequence how a man comes into the world, provided he behaves well, and discharges his duty when he is in it.

FINIS.

65666153

Henri Pommeroy

11

1907
C. 21

